122. Comments

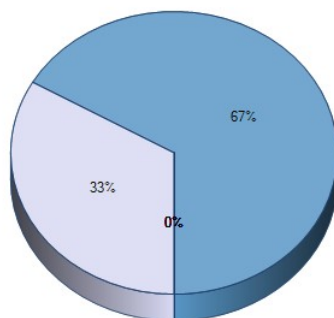

- I think the student input when it comes to teachers fails to get the point across to the higher ups (like the deans, presidents, etc.) I had one class where we had one teacher that told us day one if we couldn't read the book and figure everything out on her own she couldn't help us. The majority of my class ended up dropping the class all together but I needed to take it. Those of us that stayed failed every test, every quiz, every homework, because the teacher simply didn't want to teach us what she was testing and most of it wasn't in the book. We were pretty much told because she had tenure the school was unable to do anything so she is still teaching there even though she has no respect for the students and does not want to see them succeed. I think the student evaluations don't really count for as much as they should.
- The parking was awful. There's hardly any parking for students, which caused me to park off campus and worry about my car being safe and if it was safe to walk during the night and get my car.
