Course Information

Course Description

course?

This course examines the growth and development of cities in the United States from the colonial period to the present, focusing on four broad, overlapping subjects: growth and differentiation within urban systems and city-regional relations, the built environment, urban society and group relations, and civic life.

Rationale and expected outcomes of offering the Course

Students will increase their historical knowledge of American urban history, an important feature of the nation's social, cultural, and political history. They will also strengthen their civic knowledge and integrative thinking skills. Assignments utilize historical analysis to inform understanding of municipal civic issues, with an emphasis on urban reform movements. Readings draw on multiple fields, including history, geography, and urban planning.
